

Michelle is single and does not have any kids. Her career as a software developer keeps her at the office most days and it has begun to take a toll on her social life. She feels like she needs someone new in her life.

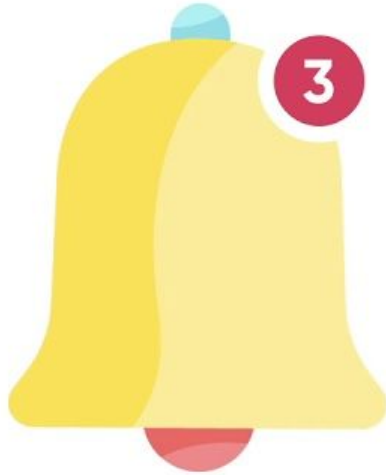

She's looking for her perfect man, but can't seem to stumble across him.

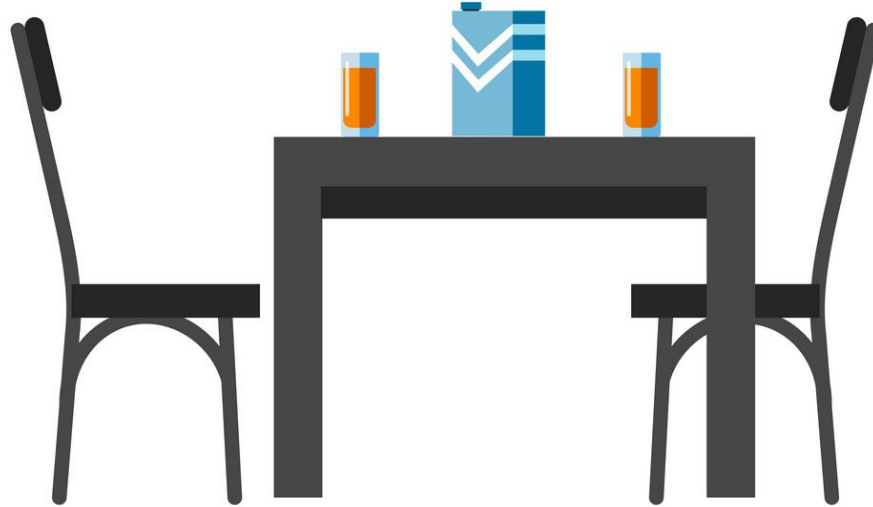

He'd love dogs and have a passion for travel. And above all would be able to understand her busy schedule.

So, she did what any software developer would do. She turned to technology, finding an interesting new app called iMeet.

The app's sorting mechanics worked like a charm, she had a date set up with a seemingly perfect guy in the next available spot in her schedule.

The next thing she knew she was on a date with a guy perfect for her. She'd found herself a partner with similar interest that was willing to work around her schedule, all thanks to iMeet.